MANAGER'S COMMENT

During the first part of the period, central bankers' restrictive rhetoric and geopolitical tensions dampened summer optimism. Geopolitical developments, economic indicators deterioration and concerns over inflation slowdown pace, volatility renewed on risky markets. As market participants are acknowledging the «higher for longer» interest rate policy, investors regained optimism on the back of central bankers adopting a more accommodating stance at the end of October. As evidenced by US 10-year yield falling by almost 120 basis points to reach 3.80% at the end of the period after touching the 5% mark. Inflation was slowing over the year hovering around 3% at the end of the quadrimester in the United States. Job markets strength is not waning, and activity indicators are not deteriorating with the composite PMI still in expansion territory sitting at 50.90.

After starting its monetary tightening cycle during the beginning of 2022 and raising rates 11 times, the US Federal Reserve has not raised rates anymore since the end of July 2023 and left those unchanged at 5.50% target. In Europe, despite depressed macroeconomic outlook, inflation fell sharply over the period and reached 2.9% at year-end, close to the ECB's target level. Business activity is slowing down with the composite PMI remaining in contraction territory at 47.60.

The end of 2023 has brought more than one Christmas present for investors. After the slight correction at the end of the previous quarter, equity markets and almost all major asset classes shown strong rebound since the end of October. For instance, US equities has enjoyed eight consecutive weeks of gains, propelling the S&P 500 to an annual performance of 24.2% while the Euro Stoxx 50 closed the year up 19.2%.

Next year: soft economic growth and gradually cooling inflation. In 2024, we see the economy slowing further as the fiscal stimulus is further wound down and the lagged impacts of tighter monetary policy feed through. The adjustment will be mitigated by stubbornly strong labor markets and softer inflation which will restore household purchasing power. The US economy should continue to hold up better than the euro zone and the UK. In this environment, central banks should gradually ease monetary policy from early summer, once they are certain over core inflation trajectory.

Equity allocation rose slightly to 79.10% at the end of the period. This was essentially due to the purchase of the iShares MSCI USA Small Cap ESG Enhanced tracker at the end of the year, emphasizing US small caps attractiveness. The increase in the US equity portfolio allocation was achieved at the cost of emerging countries allocation with the reduction of the Hermes Asia Ex Japan Equity fund. We can also mention the sale of the US 10-year for the bond allocation.
